The Kilrathi Dreadnought was at one time the most terrifying ship in the sky. Dwarfing even the massive Kilrathi Carriers, the dreadnought was often seen as an arbiter of doom. Measuring in at over 20 kilometers long, the dreadnought mounted dozens of flak cannons for anti-fighter defence. For ship battles the dreadnought carries dozens of torpedos and the capacity to launch scores of them at a time.

In typical Kilrathi design fashion, the Dreadnought is designed to resemble a massive hand, or claw. This design has been the reason many people came to call the dreadnought the "Hand of Doom."

There was only one dreadnought of this class confirmed to exist during the war, and that was Prince Thrakath's personal command station. While it's not clear what happened to the actual ship following the war, it has not been seen since the destruction of Kilrah.
